ROGER FEDERER
UNIQLO Global Brand Ambassador

“When I play tennis, the material I’m wearing is very important. Especially when I have a long, hard game. I have to depend on my equipment and clothing that quickly absorbs sweat. To me, DRY-EX provides exactly that kind of support. I like the smooth feel and the very comfortable fit. I’ll wear a polo shirt at a match or a press conference, or a jacket with a hood when I travel. DRY-EX is a perfect match in any setting in my daily life.”

The next wave uses less water

Having worked with Kaihara Denim in Japan since 1998 in the pursuit of higher quality, UNIQLO jeans are made with design strategies and environmentally conscious methods in mind. While water is essential to jean production, we explore cutting-edge technology and expert techniques to reduce our water usage for select denim styles to as much as 99% compared to traditional production methods. We continue to work diligently to expand these methods to the production of all our jeans.

Our DRY-EX Polo Shirts and DRY-EX Pique Polo Shirts now incorporate recycled PET bottles into their fabric. This reduces carbon dioxide emissions and reuses man-made material, but the fabric’s functionality remains unchanged, providing the same moisture-wicking capability you can rely on.

We’ve eliminated all plastic bags from our US stores and now offer new ways to cut down waste and give back. Purchase a paper bag to donate to our non-profit partner charity: water; receive a 15-cent rebate when you purchase our newly redesigned Eco-Friendly Bag in two sizes, or bring your own bag.

To meet our target of reducing our use of disposable plastic 85% by the end of this year, UNIQLO is reconsidering the packaging of every product and shifting to more environmentally friendly materials.
